

Dear Louis Lopez,

Congratulations on becoming a Check Point Certified Engineer. You now belong to an exclusive group of professionals who specialize in the field of enterprise security. As a Check Point Certified Engineer you have proven your ability to:

- Understand the architecture and file structure of FireWall-1
- Manage multiple firewalls using a single management station
- Configure the Account Management Client to effectively manage an LDAP compliant server
- Grant selective network access to authorized remote and corporate users
- Ensure the privacy and integrity of communications over untrusted, public networks like the Internet
- Provide content security at the gateway to screen malicious content, such as viruses and malevolent Java/ActiveX applets
- Detect network attacks and misuse in real time and respond automatically to defeat an attack
- Ensure high availability to network resources and applications

As a Check Point Certified Security Engineer you are entitled to the following benefits:

Certification Certificate: A certificate suitable for framing, which documents the certification, you have achieved.

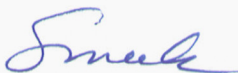

Identification card: An identification card that documents which certification you have achieved.

Support Benefits: CCSE certification earns free access to Technical Support staff for five support incidents followed through to resolution during the first year after certification. To access the technical support office call 817-606-6600. An automatic call direction system (ACD) will prompt you to select your support level. You will select 2 for end-user and 3 for Incident Support Customers.

SecurNet: You will receive access to SecurNet, a web-based technical reference containing information on the Check Point family of products, the knowledge base and the latest patches and fixes. To access SecurNet, please go to the following site: <http://www.checkpoint.com/support/technical>. This site is password protected. Your user name is llopez@vericenter.com and password is 582516300.

If you have any questions about these benefits, or need further assistance please contact the Check Point certification team certification@ts.checkpoint.com or (877) 247-7111. Again, congratulations on your recent accomplishment.

Regards,
